Transfer Status of the 2000-01 Del Mar College Graduates and Non-Returning Students

This report includes transfer information for all Del Mar College 2000-01 graduates and non-returners. Students who graduated during 2000-01 or who were enrolled during that year but did not return to Del Mar College for the fall semester of 2001, and who transferred to a Texas public higher education institution, are included in this report. The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board—through the Automated Student and Adult Learner Follow-up System (ASALFS)—provides annual student-level transfer data.

This information is useful in identifying the institutions to which students in each major are most likely to transfer, and whether students in a particular discipline tend to continue with the same major after they transfer. Please note, however, that it does not account for all students who eventually transfer. Only students who are enrolled during their first fall semester after leaving our institution are counted as transfers in these reports. Students who transfer at a later date (the following spring semester or even several years later) after leaving Del Mar College are not identified as transfers through this methodology. In addition, this report does not include students who transfer to private institutions or to institutions outside of Texas. However, data is compiled in the same manner for all community colleges in Texas, so the overall transfer rate for Del Mar College derived from this data can be compared to other public institutions throughout the state.

Transfer information has been provided for the graduates and non-returners in each major, and has been organized by division and student major (in alphabetical order). When reviewing divisional information prepared in the enclosed tables, please notice the first two rows of data show the number of graduates and non-returners for that major and their transfer status. The subsequent rows identify those institutions to which the students transferred and the majors that they declared at the transfer institutions. If there were no graduates in the major during 2000-01, the column labeled “Graduates” is suppressed, and only data about non-returners is shown.

Over 1,700 Del Mar College students who graduated or left during the 2000-01 academic year chose to pursue additional education in the fall of 2001, with 85 percent of those transferring to senior public institutions. Forty-eight percent of the graduates and non-returners who transferred chose to enroll at Texas A&M University–Corpus Christi. The second most popular transfer destination in 2001 was Texas A&M University in College Station.

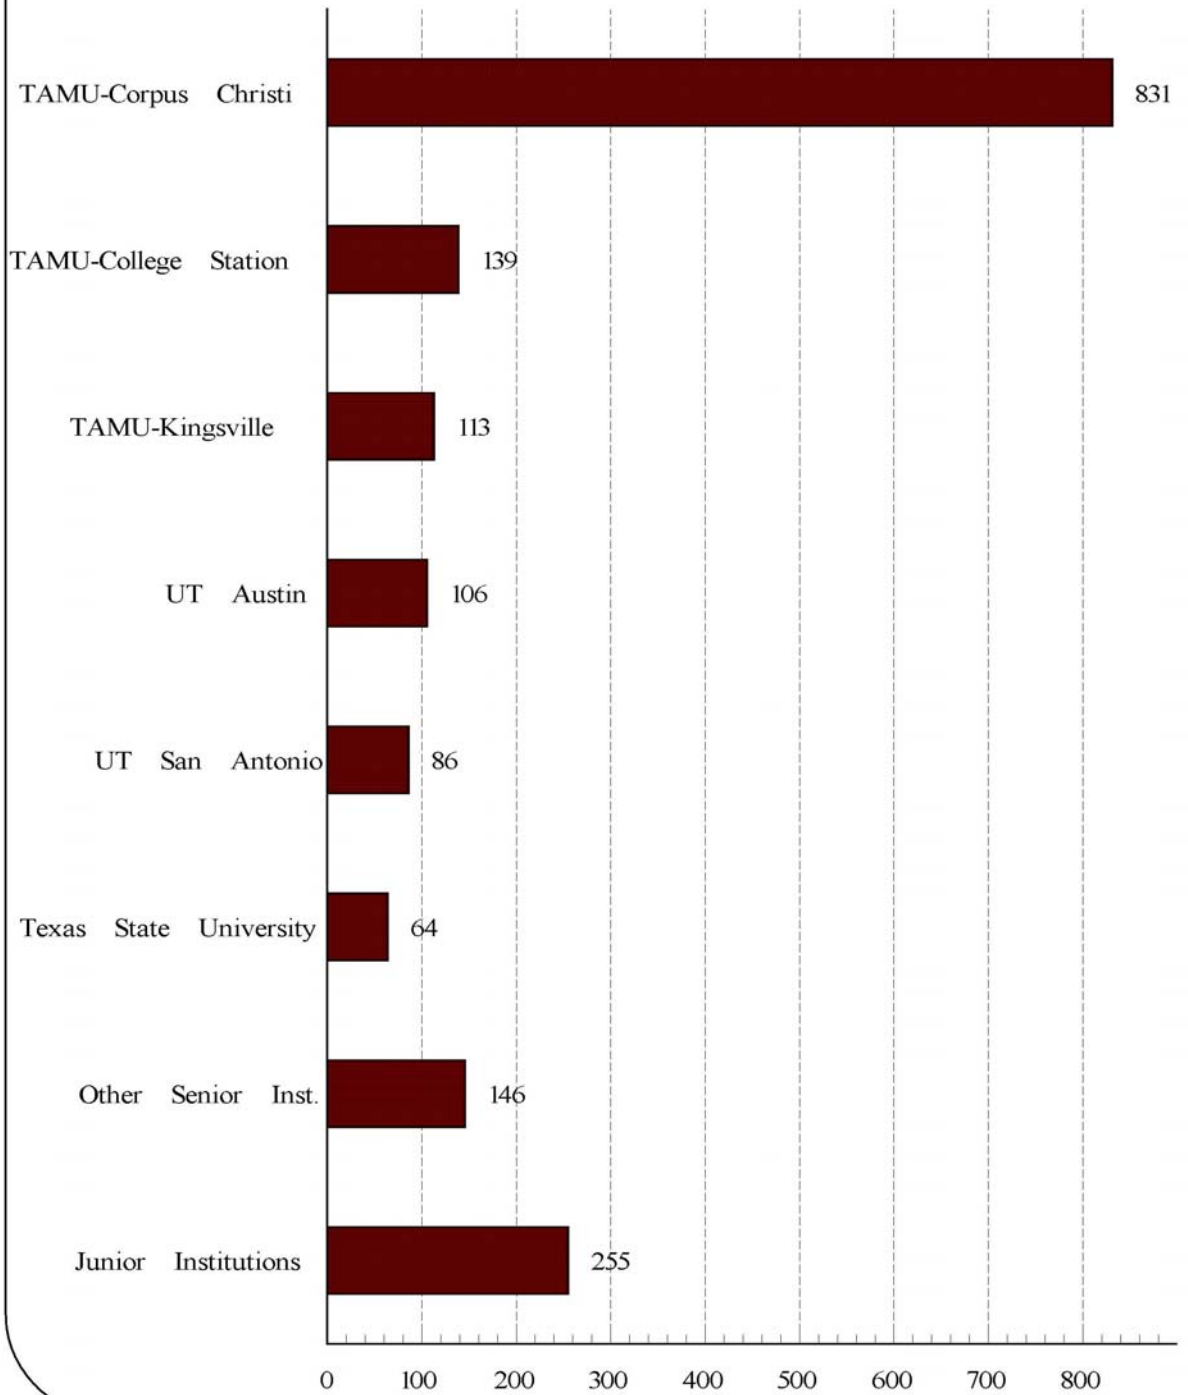

Graduates of academic programs were more likely than other students to pursue additional education, with 69 percent of the 2000-01 academic graduates enrolled in a Texas higher education institution the following fall semester. In comparison, only 59 percent of the 2000-01 academic graduates of Texas community colleges were identified as pursuing additional education in the fall of 2001. As in past years, the percentage of Del Mar College’s academic, technical, and undeclared non-returners who transferred was lower than the statewide averages for community college non-returners.

Source: The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, automated student follow-up system. The follow-up system matches the social security numbers of students who were enrolled at Del Mar College during the fall 2000, spring 2001, or summer 2001 semesters and who did not re-enroll fall 2001 against the fall 2001 student enrollments reported by all Texas public higher education institutions. The social security numbers of all graduates during the 2000-01 academic year were included in the matching process.
